

Adapting to Challenges

The leadership challenge that I currently face entails leading a group in the AI consulting domain where team players have different opinions, methods, and styles of communication. Even though these differences yield creativity, they also hinder the decision-making process and the attainment of the specified goals. In addition, one has to balance leadership functions with other responsibilities, such as deadlines, presentations, and coursework, which necessitates good time-management skills and flexibility.

The story of Moses can help me to face this challenge effectively. When God asked Moses to bring the Jews out of slavery, Moses expressed his insecurities regarding his leadership abilities. Nevertheless, God told him: "I will be with you" (NIV, 2011, Exodus 3:11-12). Thus, I believe that leadership is not about knowing everything; rather, it is about having faith in God.

Like Moses, I sometimes wonder if I can make the right decisions. In addition to depending on my conscience, I might use God's wisdom given through prayers and the Scriptures. Through prayers, I become patient, humble, and discerning, while the Scriptures reveal such values as the concepts of servant leadership, integrity, kindness, and forgiveness that help me in my leadership activities. Moses exemplifies the value of listening to others for effective leadership. He demonstrated his belief in the need for good leaders to get help from others when he took advice from Jethro to hand over responsibilities to others instead of doing everything himself. I can learn from Moses and make it a point to keep lines of communication open, be receptive to differing points of view, and be willing to consider the input of others when making decisions.

Moreover, the leadership of Moses also teaches me to stay flexible. Projects do not always go as expected, and difficulties come up which require adjustments in the strategy. Rather than giving up, I want to stay flexible and communicate effectively with my team and keep faith in God's guidance.

2. As I navigate my career preparation, one of the crucial aspects I need to embark on is ensuring that I grow my technical and leadership skills in the process. This means pursuing many opportunities in the field of artificial intelligence and consulting, which will definitely take me out of my comfort zone as I will need to learn new technologies and take responsibility for things that are risky. At times, my fear of failing or making a wrong decision stops me from taking a leap. Though, in moments of hesitation, I look at Esther's story as at a source of inspiration. She had to make a tough choice of either remaining quiet and safe or risking her life to save her nation. Even though talking to the king might lead to her death, she was confident that God had a plan and she was brave enough to follow it through (New International Version, 2011, Esther 4:14).

Another takeaway from Esther's story is the idea of preparation. She prayed, fasted, and considered what she was going to do before she went to speak to the king. Instead of being impulsive, she approached the situation with both faith and strategic thought. You can learn from Esther's example that the value of being patient and waiting for God's timing is vital. Rather than rushing into requests of the king, Esther chose to wait for the right moment. This is a lesson for us about the need to practice patience as well as bravery when leading in the future.

Mordecai's remarks to Esther, "Who knows if perhaps you were made queen for just such a time as this?" can be viewed as a reminder that the Lord prepares people for great things long before they even know what these responsibilities might be. The skills and experience that I acquire may come in handy in my future leadership endeavors. Esther's life is a wonderful source of inspiration when it comes to overcoming difficulties and challenges that one encounters as a leader.
